

A continuous function which is non-differentiable infinitely often

Does there exist a function $f : \mathbb{R} \rightarrow \mathbb{R}$ (i.e., the domain is the real numbers and every value is a real number) such that $f(x)$ is continuous everywhere and not differentiable in infinitely many places?